PRIMARY EDUCATION (4-12)
MA /
2019/20 ENTRY

www.ucl.ac.uk/graduate/
The MA Primary Education (4-12) develops critical understanding of policy development in primary education within the UK and internationally. It meets the rapidly changing needs of professionals educating young children, in examining critically the bases for current practices in primary schools, providing insight into international developments in primary education and in offering opportunities to work with leading researchers and practitioners in the field.

Degree summary

The programme offers opportunities to engage with the latest research and international debate concerning curriculum, pedagogy and assessment and its implications for professional practice in primary education. Students will develop knowledge and skills to evaluate and conduct educational research related to their professional interests and develop their own perspectives as leaders in primary education.

- The Primary and Early Years Education staff team at UCL Institute of Education (IOE) have been at the forefront of international research for two decades including the renowned Effective Pre-School, Primary and Secondary Education (EPPSE) project. The programme also has strong links to the innovative Helen Hamlyn Centre for Pedagogy (0-11). The programme sits as part of the wider MA Early Years Education. The MA Primary Education (4-12) focuses specifically on primary education but you will also have the opportunity to exchanges ideas with and learn from students studying across the early years and primary age phases.

- This degree supports understanding and insights into primary education nationally and internationally, and contributes to personal and professional development in the field of study.

- Previous students have found it helpful in developing their critical awareness of how policy and practice interact and its influence on their practice, for example: "linking classroom and school practice to research and thinking about the implications of research findings and resulting possibilities" (E. Taylor-Jones, 2018)

This programme is delivered through face-to-face sessions which are a mix of mainly evenings 5.30-8.30pm and a few Saturdays across the year. Sessions are a mixture of input by specialists and discussion in seminars and workshops. Assessment is through assignments and a dissertation/report.

Degree structure

Mode: Full-time: 1 year; Part-time: 2 years; Flexible: up to 5 years
Location: London, Bloomsbury
Students take modules to the value of 180 credits. The programme consists of three compulsory modules (90 credits), one optional module (30 credits) and a dissertation (60 credits). For those students who import (up to 60) credits via Accreditation of Prior Learning, a report (30 credits) may be undertaken instead of the dissertation.

Visit the UCL Institute of Education website for more information, including module descriptions, which can be seen by clicking on the module title.

DISSERTATION/REPORT

Students undertake an independent research project which culminates in a 20,000-word dissertation or 10,000 word report.

There is an opportunity in the Autumn term to visit a primary school, particularly for those unfamiliar with the English education system.

If you wish to undertake any of your research in UK schools or settings, you will need to apply and pay for a DBS (Disclosure and Barring Service) check.
Your career

Graduates of this programme are currently working in a broad range of careers, both nationally and internationally. Many have leadership roles in schools, for example as school mentors for early career teachers, subject leaders, phase co-ordinators, assistant head teachers or head teachers. Others work as education advisers and consultants across a range of schools or as inspectors and policymakers at both local and national levels. Graduates can also be found working as researchers, lecturers and teacher educators in higher education and in educational services outside schools such as museums, publishing or children's support services.

Employability

By taking this programme students develop an international, critical and deep understanding of primary leadership, curriculum, pedagogy and assessment.
