Degree benefits

// UCL Security & Crime Science is the first university department in the world devoted specifically to reducing crime and other risks to personal and national security, and houses the Institute for Global City Policing, which aims to foster cutting edge research on policing in a globalised world.

// You will be provided with the latest knowledge, technical and human skills needed to pursue a successful career in policing and related law enforcement professions.

// You will learn the philosophical and theoretical justifications for adopting an evidenced based and scientific approach to professional policing practice, and explore applications to a wide range of crime and security problems.

// You will be taught by academic experts in security and crime reduction, with input from practitioners and policymakers to provide a focus on real-world relevance and impact.

Degree structure

In each year of your degree you will take a number of individual modules, normally valued at 15 or 30 credits, adding up to a total of 120 credits for the year. Modules are assessed in the academic year in which they are taken. The balance of compulsory and optional modules varies from programme to programme and year to year. A 30-credit module is considered equivalent to 15 credits in the European Credit Transfer System (ECTS).

In the first year, all your modules are compulsory, introducing fundamental concepts related to crime and security, criminological theories and legal powers of the police.

In year two, in addition to compulsory modules, you will be able to choose from a range of options, according to your specific area of interest, including a work placement based module within police forces as Special Constables or shadowing police officers (subject to availability and eligibility).

In the final year you will undertake six compulsory taught modules. You will also carry out a six month empirical research project enabling you to source, analyse, and evaluate the available evidence, and to adapt and apply it in the context of routine policing, thus contributing to the existing evidence base on policing related challenges.

Upon successful completion of 360 credits, you will be awarded a BSc (Hons) in Professional Policing.

Please note that the list of modules given here is indicative. This information is published a long time in advance of enrolment and module content and availability is subject to change.

Your learning

A combination of lectures, seminars, workshops, individual and group projects will form your learning experience, which also includes problem-based learning methods, outcome-based analysis and research activities.

Placement

Only UK nationals who clear basic CTC vetting will be eligible to choose work placements as Special Constables with selected police forces as part of their Professional Practice in the Workplace module. Students will have to fulfil the entry requirements and pass the standard physical tests in order to apply for work placements as Special Constables in selected police forces. Police forces will interview and select suitable applicants who will agree to commit to undergoing additional compulsory training prior to the commencement of their placement. Those who do not choose to undertake placement as a special constable or are not selected will be given opportunities to apply for other relevant research based work placements with law enforcement and security agencies.

Assessment

A wide range of assessment methods are used by this programme, including unseen examinations, coursework assignments, practical assignments, oral presentations, poster presentations, policy reports and the dissertation.

Accessibility

Details of the accessibility of UCL buildings can be obtained from AccessAble. Further information can also be obtained from the UCL Student Support & Wellbeing team.

Your career

You will gain the necessary insight and skills, both intellectual and practical, to take up a wide range of crime and security-relevant positions throughout the world. The multidisciplinary approach gives you a competitive edge in the job market through your ability to work across disciplines in the service of crime reduction. However, please note, there are no guarantees of entry to a police force post completion.

As the first cohort of this programme will graduate in 2023, we do not have any career destinations available. However, we anticipate that the majority of graduates will enter the policing profession. Please note that every police force has its own recruitment, selection and eligibility requirements and you will need to successfully pass these stages.

Your application

Application for admission should be made through UCAS (the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service). Applicants currently at school or college will be provided with advice on the process; however, applicants who have left school or who are based outside the United Kingdom may obtain information directly from UCAS.

In addition to academic requirements, we will also use your application to assess your motivation for studying professional policing. We will be seeking applicants committed to studying at the highest level, and who are eager, and able, to rise to the challenges presented both by the programme and by a career in this field.
